• ADULT EDUCATION ACT WILL NOT PROCEED

The following is the text of a news release issued by the Minister of Advanced Education and Manpower on Thursday, January 22.

The Minister of Advanced Education and Manpower today announced that he will not proceed with the draft Adult Education Act.

Dr. Bert Hohol, expressing personal reservations and concerns with respect to the draft Adult Education Act, received concurrence from his Cabinet colleagues Tuesday not to proceed with the intended legislation.

"Consequently, present Statutes for institutions of advanced education throughout the Province will remain," Dr. Hohol added.

- Following a complete review of the draft Adult Education Act, the 102 submissions on the draft, and holding numerous meetings with groups involved in higher education, the Minister decided to withdraw the draft Bill.

Without agreeing with all the contents of the submissions, Hohol feels that they raised enough significant and proper concerns for him to determine that the existing Statutes are the most appropriate for the institutions of advanced education.

The Minister feels that his decision to withdraw the draft does not mean the time invested on it by the people in the institutions, as well as in his Department, was wasted. The submissions reflect a careful review of the existing legislation as well as the draft Act, and the responses provided arguments which dissuaded Hohol from proceeding with an omnibus Act.

- Since existing legislation will remain in place, its review by institutions of advanced education provided a much needed service.

- In addition to some of the draft's content, the Minister was impressed by the case put forth by the institutions that one Statute does not serve all of them better than separate Acts.

Some amendments in the present Statutes are necessary and these will be made in future sessions of the legislature. "Submissions on the draft Act will provide the major material for such amendments," the Minister concluded.

FIRE AT ELLERSLIE RESEARCH STATION

Fire Tuesday night, January 20, completely destroyed one of six long barns at the University's Ellerslie Research Station. Of the forty-four cattle housed in the barn, one was killed in the fire and fifteen had to be destroyed as a result of extensive injury. A further twelve animals are being treated for burns.

The sixteen pregnant cows lost in the fire were from the synthetic herd developed at the University Ranch at Kinsella. Half of these animals were of a particular genetic strain and were part of a unique research project into cattle genetics. The investigation, directed by R.T. Berg, Professor of Animal Science, deals with potentially lethal genes which may be carried within a particular breed but for which the breed compensates and so survives. In cross-breeding, however, the compensation is less effective and the gene may reappear as lethal. The fire reduced the number of animals in this research project by one-quarter.

L.P. Milligan, Chairman of the Department of Animal Science, estimates the market value of the cattle at about $4,000, but calls their research value "immeasurable." The barn itself cost $30,000 to $35,000 when it was built six years ago; its replacement cost is unknown. Both animals and barn were insured.

Although the actual cause of the fire is unknown, Dr. Milligan has reason to believe that it was caused by a rock, nail, or piece of wire which heated when it came in contact with the blades of a hay cutter which had been used in the barn that day. The object afterwards would have smoldered undetected in the hay.

Dr. Milligan credits A.K. Aasen of the Agricultural Engineering Station at the Ellerslie Farm with "prompt and courageous action." After having been alerted to the fire and calling the fire department, Mr. Aasen entered the flaming barn and led the animals out. "Because of his action," Dr. Milligan said, "most of the animals were saved and the fire was prevented from destroying the other buildings."

VOLUNTEERS NEEDED BY ALBERTA HOSPITAL

Sometimes, for many patients, life in a mental institution is not much of a life; and sometimes, after the patient has been discharged, life back in the community is not much of a life either. Often, what is needed, for patients in the institution and those trying to readjust to the community, is a sense of being cared about as an individual by other individuals.

Right now, the Alberta Hospital at Oliver is looking for approximately one hundred volunteers to work with patients in the hospital and with those living in the community.

Volunteers can work either in the hospital or in the community program. Working in the community program would involve helping recently discharged patients readjust to living a non-institutionalized life. The aim of the community program is to help reduce the rate of recidivism. Many patients find the world outside the hospital too lonely and bewildering to cope with; volunteers can provide patients with friendship as well as help them deal with little skills that most people take for granted such as grocery shopping, getting around by bus, cooking, and so on. In other words, the volunteer in the community program would be helping the patient to attain a certain amount of independence and self-sufficiency.

In the hospital, volunteers would work with patients on a one-to-one basis, helping patients to establish goals for themselves and teaching them various life-skills (like housekeeping) which would be useful after discharge. Volunteers would also work with groups to establish programs such as leisure activities like dances and sports activities.

University students or graduates, especially those in psychology and sociology, make the best volunteers, says Diane Moir, volunteer coordinator. University volunteers are given more opportunity to develop programs and take on challenging projects. The range of activities in which they can get involved is only limited by the amount of time and effort they are willing to commit. Some examples of projects that University volunteers are involved in are working as members of occupational therapy teams, acting as assistants to therapists or working as co-therapists, and involving patients in back-to-school programs.

Volunteer work requires a minimum of two hours per week. The hospital provides two orientation meetings and does regular evaluations of the volunteer's activities. A shuttle-bus which leaves the Macdonald Hotel to take regular staff to the hospital for the shift changes is available for volunteers. More openings for volunteers are available during the day, but volunteers are also needed at night when the shortage of evening staff makes volunteers a real asset.

If you are interested in volunteer work either in the community program or at the hospital itself, get in touch with Diane Moir, volunteer co-ordinator, at 973-3361, extension 257. Maybe a little of your time could make someone else's time more worthwhile.

NON-CREDIT COURSES

SPORTS AND LITERATURE

The significance of sports in North American life as reflected in literature will be studied in this Faculty of Extension evening course which begins February 3.

Writers and athletes have often been strangely drawn towards each other. Hemingway, for example, used to fancy himself a boxer, and Norman Mailer likes to write about the heavyweight title fights. Many athletes have written their autobiographies telling the "true," "inside" story of the world of sports. The result has been a growing collection of sports literature, some of which is perceptive, enlightening, and entertaining.

This course, which will be held for eight Tuesdays from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m., will be taught by Jon Stott. Dr. Stott, Associate Professor of English, has been a part-time sports correspondent, radio commentator and hockey announcer, and is the author of the official history of the western (professional) hockey league and other sports studies. He taught a similar course on sports, literature, and culture in the United States.

Eight paperback books are suggested as required readings for the course. These books are readily available in most bookstores.

Registrations are accepted in 228 Corbett Hall. The fee is $25, and the class limit is 50 students. Additional information may be obtained by calling 432-5055.

WILDLIFE MANAGEMENT POLICIES IN ALBERTA

The life cycle and behavior patterns of some of Alberta's most notable wild animals and current wildlife research and management techniques will be examined in a short evening course.

The course, sponsored by the Faculty of Extension, the Edmonton Nature Centre of Edmonton Parks and Recreation Department, and the Fish and Wildlife Branch of the Department of Recreation, Parks, and Wildlife, will provide interested Albertans with a better understanding of the life cycle and behavior patterns of such animals as bears, coyotes, moose, elk, and antelope. It will also acquaint registrants with some of the wildlife research and management programs being carried out by professional biologists and zoologists in Alberta.

Class hours will be from 8 to 10 p.m. for nine Mondays beginning February 16. The registration deadline is February 9 and the fee is $25. Registrations are accepted in 228 Corbett Hall. Additional information on topics and lecturers is available by calling 432-3035.

READING AND WRITING AND THINKING

Individuals who want to be more successful in their encounters with the printed word may wish to enrol in this Faculty of Extension course which begins February 4. The course will be taught by F.J. Logan. Dr. Logan is a sessional lecturer in the Department of English.

Students will write one short essay per week, and it will be graded. During class, the instructor will discuss barriers to communication. There will be no textbooks except the short Elements of Style. The object of the course is to assist participants to write more effectively and to read more actively.

Beginning February 4, the course will be held for ten Wednesdays from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. The fee is $35, and the class limit is 25 students. Registrations are accepted in 228 Corbett Hall. For additional information, call 432-5055.

MANAGING STRESS

This is a one-day seminar for managers and other executive personnel who find their jobs

create or reflect a high degree of frustration, tension, and anxiety. Gisele Richardson will conduct the seminar, which is offered by the Faculty of Extension. Mrs. Richardson has been active in executive development for many years and is one of the pioneers in the application of Transactional Analysis techniques to management. She was trained in Transactional Analysis at the Western Institute for Group and Family Therapy and is a member of the International Transactional Analysis Association. Mrs. Richardson lectures at McGill University in Montreal.

During the day, participants will examine the system created by each individual to keep himself motivated and review which of its components are constructive and which are not, which are genuinely motivating, and which contribute to tiredness, insomnia, anxiety, and possible cardiac or digestive disturbance. Participants will look at how to reduce the stress without reducing the accomplishment and how to free oneself to enjoy one's successes. The approach will be based on Transactional Analysis, a theory of personality which is being increasingly applied to management work in North America.

Registrations are accepted in 228 Corbett Hall. The fee is $75 including luncheon. Additional information may be obtained by calling 432-5066 or 432-5067.

WE'RE LOOKING FOR VOLUNTEERS

Understanding volunteers. Volunteers who are open-minded, who are prepared to put their time to work in a different, but not so different, environment.

We're looking for volunteers for the Alberta Hospital, Edmonton. A 'mental hospital': one wholly concerned with work in the field of mental health.

We need volunteers to work in a variety of hospital programs, with a variety of people. As a volunteer, you could become part of an essential effort to help people who need a special kind of help. You may have had similar experience in the past — or you may be a student of the social or helping sciences now. But experience is not necessary, as you will be given a full orientation.

Please call Dianne Moir, volunteer co-ordinator at Alberta Hospital, Edmonton, for more information. Her number is 973-3361, ext. 257.

Transportation is arranged for volunteers at the hospital, which is just outside Edmonton's northeastern city limit.
